WORKSHEET 4*Read the following extracts of Emma's personal blog*A quiet Valentine'sPosted on February 14, 2014*

I gave myself a Valentine treatment at Soap.

Walking around the city, love was everywhere. I saw so many guys walking around with flower bouquets and every time, I was too late with my camera to capture it, damn! They all looked so sweet and everyone who saw them were exchanging sympathy looks with the others around and also trying to show the man himself that they had acknowledged how sweet he was.

Even one of the girls, working at the salon got a flower delivery when I was there.

Perfect Sunday past, moving onPosted on February 16, 2014*

I had one of the best weekends so far in 2014. We didn't go out and spend money. We actually stayed in and made money instead. Well, we did not actually stay in, we went to the flea market. I saw so many nice things but of course there was no point in buying since we are moving. Paul was quite happy about it. (...) I spotted so many nice things for the house... But no, no. Not allowed this time.

I had two portions of poffertjes<sup>1</sup> for lunch. But I did miss the whipped cream and jam with it. That's how we eat them in Sweden. In The Netherlands you eat them with butter.

Another gold medal to Sweden this afternoon! I watched it while I was at the gym. It really raised my adrenaline and made me run faster than ever! Thank you!

18 th century	Doctor Johnson wrote the Dictionary of English language
19 th century	English conquerors brought yoga from India, zombie from Africa and boomerang from Australia

WORKSHEET 7*The History of English in Ten Minutes

The English language begins with the phrase 'Up Yours Caesar!' as the Romans leave Britain and a lot of Germanic tribes start flooding in, tribes such as the Angles and the Saxons and the Jutes. Four of our days of the week (Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday) were named in honour of Anglo-Saxon gods.

Christianity was a hit with the locals and made them much happier to take on new words like 'martyr', 'bishop' and 'font'.

Along came the Vikings, with their action-man words like 'drag' and 'die'. They may have raped and pillaged but there were also into 'give' and 'take' – two of around 2000 words that they gave English.

In 1660 William the Conqueror invades Britain, bringing new concepts from across the channel like the French language. French was de rigueur for all official business, with words like 'judge', 'jury', 'evidence' and 'justice'. Words like 'cow', 'sheep' and 'swine' come from the English-speaking farmers, while the a la carte versions - 'beef', 'mutton' and 'pork' - come from the French-speaking. In the 14th century the English nation began the Hundred Years War against France. It actually lasted 116 years.

As the dictionary tells us, about 2000 new words and phrases were invented by Shakespeare. He gave us handy words like 'eyeball', 'puppy-dog' and 'anchovy'. Shakespeare's poetry showed the world that English was a language as rich vibrant language with limitless expressive and emotional power.

Suddenly Britain was full of physicists. At first they worked in Latin but they realised they all spoke English and could transform our understanding of the universe much quicker by talking in their own language.

With English making its name as the language of science, the Bible and Shakespeare, Britain decided to take it on tour. They went to the Caribbean looking for gold and they discovered 'barbeque' and the 'canoe'. In India there was something for everyone: 'Yoga' – to help you stay in shape, while pretending to be spiritual. Meanwhile in Africa they picked up words like 'voodoo' and 'zombie'. From Australia, English took the words 'nugget', 'boomerang' and 'walkabout'.

With English expanding in all directions, along came a new breed of men called lexicographers. One of the greatest was Doctor Johnson, whose 'Dictionary of the English Language' which took him 9 years to write. If you couldn't read, it was still useful if you wanted to reach a high shelf. In 1857 a new book was started which would become the Oxford English Dictionary. It took another 70 years to be finished.

WORKSHEET 8

Do you know what happened to me yesterday? I was in a bar and a man walked into and asked for a glass of water. The bartender thought for a minute and pulled out a mechanical saw pointing it at him. The man said, "Thank you," and walked out.

Goanimate video.

SOLUTION: The man had hiccups.

The famous 'Penny Black', the world's first postage stamp, was introduced in England in 1840. The idea of postage stamps was a great success and was taken up worldwide. Yet the 'Penny Black' was in use for only one year before it was replaced by the 'Penny Red'. Why?

SOLUTION: If it was black, you couldn't see if it was franked.

There was once a recluse who never left his home. The only time anyone ever visited him was when his food and supplies were delivered, but they never came inside. Then, one storm winter night when an icy gale was blowing, he had a nervous breakdown. He went upstairs, turned off all the lights and went to bed. Next morning, he had caused the deaths of several hundred people. How?

SOLUTION: He was a lighthouse keeper.

A man fell off a smuggling boat into deep water. He could not swim and he was not wearing anything to keep him afloat. It took 30 minutes for the people on the boat to realize someone was missing. The missing man was rescued two hours later on the return trip. Why didn't he drown?

SOLUTION: He fell into the Dead Sea.

A postman had to deliver a letter to a house that was surrounded by a high wall. The house could be approached only by the main path. Unfortunately, a ferocious dog was tied by a long lead to a nearby tree so that the path was well within the dog's range. If the postman walked up the path, he was sure to be attacked by the dog. How did he deliver the letter?

SOLUTION: The postman kept circling the house outside the wall, watching the dog. The dog kept circling the house outside the wall, watching the postman. When the dog had wrapped his leash around the tree enough times, the postman could safely deliver the letter.

A man had a new red car. He pushed it and he stopped at a very luxurious hotel. Suddenly, he was bankrupt. Why?

SOLUTION: He was playing Monopoly.

A man and his wife raced through the streets. They stopped, and the husband got out of the car. When he came back, his wife was dead. There was a stranger in the car. What happened?

SOLUTION: The woman was pregnant and gave birth to a child (the stranger). Unfortunately, she didn't survive after the delivery.
